RESEARCH (ORCID: 0000-0002-7296-324X)

Our research program aims at better understanding the mechanisms underlying symmetry breaking, and how this information is propagated to cells and organs. We are also trying to understand how asymmetry can cross organizational layers to become multiscale (from molecular to behavioral) and whether these fundamental mechanisms are conserved during evolution. To these goals, we initiated the study of LR asymmetry in Drosophila. Our previous work identified Myosin1D as a unique situs inversus gene, regulating visceral LR asymmetry through cell death, E-Cadherin, HOX genes and the conserved PCP pathways. More recently, we have shown that Myo1D orthologs control LR asymmetry in both xenopus and zebrafish, revealing Myo1D as the first unifying principle of laterality across phyla.

Our current work aims at identifying new genes/pathways and concepts controlling asymmetry and motility, using multiscale approaches combining biochemistry, genetics, cell biology and modeling. More specifically, we design large-scale genetic and molecular screens to i) identify new genes controlling visceral LR asymmetry, ii) establish Drosophila as a new paradigm to study brain asymmetry and iii) identify new genes involved in the control of cell motility in vivo.
